Interactive sheet music - Tomplay reaches 25,000-user milestone, launches Android version of the app

More than 25,000 musicians from around the world now use Tomplay interactive sheet music.

We are very pleased to announce that more than 25,000 musicians now use Tomplay interactive sheet music to learn and play their instrument.

Thanks to all the efforts of the entire Tomplay team, we released more than 2,500 interactive sheet music for twelve instruments during 2016, adapted to all levels, from beginner to professional. By expanding our catalogue, we were able to acquire new users from around the world, notably from the United States, Japan, France, United Kingdom, and Germany, and to offer them along with our loyal existing clients a catalogue filled with several new pieces.

We will keep heading in this direction in 2017, as we'll release more than 10,000 new interactive scores all while maintaining our high quality standards that we have set for ourselves. As always, these sheet music will be recorded by professional musicians from all around the world.

Thanks to the partnership agreements that we have developed and will keep developing with several record labels, we will keep releasing classical pieces alongside of pop, rock, and jazz.

Finale of "Les Intrépides" competition in 2016, won by Tomplay, televised on RTS and TV5 Monde

Discover the new app for Android

In mid-January of 2017, we launched the new Tomplay Android app for tablets, which completes the applications already available on iPad and computer. The Android app is available here: <http://bit.ly/2juFrLa>

What is a Tomplay interactive sheet music?

Tomplay creates interactive music sheets in order to offer all musicians a fun, dynamic, and efficient way of learning and playing musical instruments.

Tomplay scores are made as much for beginners as for established musicians, and cover all genres of music including: classical, pop, rock, jazz, folk, movie soundtracks, and world music. Moreover, Tomplay music sheets allow all musicians to play their favourite pieces accompanied by high quality recordings made by professional musicians. The music sheets scroll automatically across the screen with music playing, all at the desired tempo. Several other features of Tomplay, such as annotating the scores, recording and playing back music, or looping a specific passage, all allow for a simple and interactive learning and playing experience.
